Dear [redacted]

I thoroughly agree with your letter of March 22. The meeting went off excellently, and as I wrote Dr. Kinzel, I was much impressed by the manner in which both sides appreciated each other's points of view and stimulated a good deal of constructive thinking.

Ordinarily initial meetings such as this have a tendency to be somewhat stilted and sterile since we don't know the briefers' capabilities and the briefer is unaware of our interests. In this instance I was most interested in seeing how many subjects of decided mutual interest appeared, and I expect that our people will be following up on many of these.

To avoid confusion we will proceed along the lines agreed on when you were down here. That is, all initial contacts will be made through you.

I would much appreciate your extending our thanks to all of the members of your firm who came to Washington. We all appreciated the time and effort which they devoted to this meeting. I am sure it will prove well spent.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

cvar /jlp
